"Demanding the Impossible" is the transcription of an interview between undifferentiated members of Indigo Sowon, an educational center in South Korea, and Slavoj Zizek. A question is posed at the start of each section, of which there are 34, and Zizek responds in his famously galactic style, elucidating his positions with an array of popular and historical references, all while maintaining his own singular gravity.

Demanding the Impossible by Slavoj Žižek

Asked at the end of this slim volume what "the most urgent theoretical question of our time," Zizek (The Year of Dreaming Dangerously), the seemingly ubiquitous Slovenian philosopher, urges his audience to "redefine and rethink the limits of the possible and the impossible."

Demanding the Impossible finds Slavoj Zizek waxing passionately on a variety of subjects -- financial crises, popular uprisings, political upheavals and, indeed, political paranoia -- with a kind of admirable passion that reminds of seminal works composed by the likes of Orwell and Chomsky, albeit without the force of wit and style that distinguishes them as writers (that they have more of an impact on our social consciousness seems self-evident).

Demanding The Impossible Slavoj Zizek

Demanding the Impossible is a book that indeed makes the impossible (or at least the difficult) possible: it presents a series of interviews with Slavoj Žižek – a philosopher renowned for his impenetrable and idiosyncratic style – and covers some of the most topical issues of our times in a truly accessible and enjoyable way. The range of topics discussed varies from North Korea to the Egyptian Revolution, to the conceptualisation of new revolutionary forms to fear of love, from ...

Demanding the Impossible Quotes by Slavoj Žižek

Demanding the Impossible is the first book by or about Slavoj Zizek that I've read, and I doubt that its question-and-answer format enables him to begin to do justice to the uniqueness of his perspective. As it is, Zizek comes off as a well-meaning, earnest, and decent guy who may or may not be an original thinker.
